TODAY'S PROGRAM

Billy McCord, SC Dept. of Natural Resources, S.C.'s Marsh Hammock Islands- Billy McCord presented a program on South Carolina's hammock islands.

South Carolina has several thousand small coastal islands found in association with its larger Sea Islands. These small islands, ranging in size from less than an acre to several hundred acres, are most numerous between the Santee and Savannah Rivers. Termed marsh hammocks or back barrier islands, they are typically located behind the oceanfront barrier islands and adjacent to the larger Sea Islands. Other hammocks are found along the intra-coastal waterway or adjacent to coastal rivers and estuaries. Almost all are surrounded by expanses of Salt Marsh, occasionally being bordered by tidal creeks or rivers. Many of those hammocks adjacent to the Intracoastal Waterway or other dredged waterways were constructed of dredged sediments, and some hammocks are the result of phosphate ore mining or causeway construction. Marsh hammocks, depending upon their size, age, location, and elevation, have various types of maritime forests.
