TODAY'S PROGRAM

Dr. Harris Pastides, the 28th president of the University of South Carolina, gave us his thoughts of where he wants to take the entire University system. He described the University as being more like a constellation in the night sky, with the Columbia campus being just one star, as opposed to a solar system with the Columbia campus being the central sun. Wouldn't it be nice to look up one night and see a constellation that forms the shape of South Carolina?

He is working on a project he refers to as "Focus Carolina." Its three components include priority setting, matching resources with what matters most, and working more efficiently and effectively.

USC has an annual budget of over $1 billion. Dr. Pastides promised that the University will continue to offer a world-class education even if a tuition increase is required.
